PREFACE.

THE coins of the Khalifehs of the House of Umayyeh possess an interest peculiarly their own. Unlike those of the 'Abbāsīs, historically they are of little value. But it is not from the historian's standpoint that we should view them. Their true worth lies in their being the first purely-Mohammadan coinage that was issued by the Arabs. We picture to ourselves the Khalifeh 'Abd-El-Melik, wearied with the difficulties and ignominy of an adopted currency, calling together the wise men of his court, and constructing a new coinage, full of the spirit that had fired the East and well-nigh conquered the world. We cannot but be struck with the contrast between these early Muslim issues and the Byzantine and late Sassanian coins which were at first adopted by the Arabs. The difference between the debased art of the Byzantine and the decayed ruins of what had once been the fine Sassanian coinage, on the one hand, and the simple chaste outlines of the first standard coins of the Muslims, on the other, is the difference between decrepit and demoralized nations and a people full of the fresh vigour of youth. There is a power in the design of these earliest monuments of El-Islām for which we may look in vain among coinages contemporary with it; and the strong bold lines of the Kūfī character well express the mighty impulse which urged on the followers of the Prophet.

It is not only as the expression of the power of the greatest revolution which the Middle Ages witnessed that these coins are to be prized. Though their historical worth is slight, and scarcely, in fact, bears upon anything but the territorial extent of the Muslim empire, yet palæographically they are greatly to be valued, as the earliest and most authoritative examples of the Kūfī character, the progenitor of the characters now in use from Morocco to India. Moreover, as their Prophet sternly discouraged the fine arts, the Arabs devoted themselves with exceptional success to the study of calligraphy. They had a character well worth cultivating, one of which we see the earliest record on the Amawī coins, and of which the latest and perhaps most beautiful form is the Naskhī of modern Egypt.

It has been the happiness of Oriental Numismatists to have received last year an exhaustive work on the coins of the Eastern Khalifehs,* both Amawī and 'Abbāsī, from the hands of Dr. Wold. Tiesenhausen. To overestimate the value of this book is impossible, and we cannot be too grateful to Dr. Tiesenhausen for the labour he has bestowed upon the work,—labour which was not illspent, for it has conferred upon the science of numismatics a benefit such as few have been able to give.

Dr. Tiesenhausen has placed before us the whole coinage of the Khalifehs of the East so far as that coinage was published. There are, however, some collections with respect to the contents of which little or nothing is publicly known. Such, so far as Oriental coins are concerned, are the cabinets of Paris, London, and of Col. Seton Guthrie.†

It is with the view of remedying this defect, as to Col. Guthrie's collection at least, and of supplementing Dr.

* Monnaies des Khalifes Orientaux, 4to., St. Petersburg, 1873. I refer to this book throughout by the initial (T.) after every edited coin.

† Of this last, indeed, some large portions have been published by Mr. Thomas.

Tiesenhausen's work with some thirty or forty unpublished coins, that this Catalogue has been drawn up. The series which it describes is scarcely, if at all, inferior to the corresponding portion in the British Museum, and an estimate may be formed of the rarities contained in it by reference to the list of Inedited coins at the end: the dinār of Afrikiyeh, and the dirhems of Sarakhs 99, Sūḳ-el-Ahwāz 79, and Meysān 95, 96, are especially noteworthy. The last coin in the series, struck by the advocate of the 'Abbāsīs, Abū-Muslim, is very curious, though already published.

The arrangement of the coins in this Catalogue is entirely new. I have separated the gold from the silver, and classed the latter under Mints instead of under Khalifehs. At present I will only say that this arrangement is far more convenient for reference, and I will reserve the ground for the adoption of this classification for an essay, which I hope before long to bring out, on the Coinage of the Amawī Khalifehs, in which I propose treating of several points in this coinage which have hitherto been overlooked or not investigated as they deserve.

The copper issues of the Amawīs I keep back to be described in connection with the 'Abbāsī copper, after the gold and silver of the 'Abbāsīs have been catalogued.

An important feature in this Catalogue is the invariable registration of the annulets which surround the marginal inscriptions.* The diacritical and other points, also, are recorded whenever they occur. These with the annulets will take a prominent place in my future essay.

* Prof. J. G. Stickel of Jena, unlike most numismatists, has paid attention to this detail of recording the annulets: this is only one of the many distinguishing points which raise his Handbuch zur morgenländischen Münzkunde (erstes Heft, 1845, Omajjaden- und Abbasiden-Münzen) to the very first rank amongst the classics of numismatics, if I may use the term.

The plates accompanying the Catalogue are designed to give a tolerably complete view of the Amawī coinage, and with that object are unusually numerous. The photographic (Autotype) process by which they were produced insures the exact representation of any peculiarities that appear on the coins. The figures on the plates refer to the numbers in the Catalogue.

Exception will probably be taken to my method of spelling Oriental names. Notably the word Amawī, as a substitute for the time-honoured but most objectionable mongrel Ommiade, will be considered an unwarrantable innovation. The only other grammatical form—and this would be equally offensive to Ommiadists—is Umarī, and to this Amawī is undoubtedly to be preferred.

In conclusion I wish to express my thanks to my kind friend Col. Guthrie for the free use he has permitted me to make of the whole of his valuable collection, and for the confidence in me which he has shown by putting the present work into my hands.

The final letter of دبیل does not extend above the line of the tops of the preceding ب and ی, and would therefore appear to be ا or ن: but I am nevertheless of opinion that the word is Debīl, partly because none of the rēs occurring on the coin extends below the line of the connecting strokes of ب and س and such-like letters, whilst this final letter does so extend; and partly because Debīl is already a known mint (cf. T. 314) and the capital of Armenia, whereas Debīr is only a village near Nīsābūr. The other alternative, Dubbeyn, does not, so far as I know, exist as the name of a town: it is mentioned in the Adnotationes to the Marāṣid el-iṭṭilā (T. v. p. 433) as a district, 'pagus trans Jordanem prope جِراش.'

The British Museum possesses a similar coin of the year 92, as may be seen by a reference to the plate attached to my essay on the Mint Characteristics of Arabic Coins. See also Mr. Thomas's Comments on Recent Pehlvi Decipherments, p. 31.

* The name is also spelt Sarkhas, but the orthography I have adopted seems to be held in better esteem.

A similar coin of the same year is to be found in the British Museum (see the table in my Mint Char., Num. Chron. n.s. XIII. pl. 1).

I am quite unable to identify this mint with any known town. No name corresponding in the least with this is to be found in the Marāṣid-el-iḥḥilā', or in Yāqūt's works. There can be no doubt whatever as to the name delineated on the coin: every character is perfectly distinct, and we are forced to read الساميه, though of course this might be Es-Sāmiyeh, by omitting the points: I think the penultimate letter must be a ي. There is not the slightest trace of a connection between the alif and the following mīm, by which the alif would be turned into a lām. Señ. Camarino seems to read it Es-Sāmiyat (i.e. Es-Sāmiyeh): see Mr. Thomas's Comments, p. 31.

This is the first coin in this series on which I find the grammatical mistake of using the masculine form اثنى of the dual numeral in adjectival connection with the feminine noun سنة. On all the preceding coins the correct feminine form اثنتين or (contracted) ثنتين has been employed. The latter form ثنتين, which very commonly takes the place of اثنتين, has been almost universally misread by numismatists: they generally transcribe the word as اثنى, although this is grammatically wrong, and moreover (so far as my experience goes) is uniformly opposed to the form of the letter, the connecting line between the first stroke and the second proving the former stroke to be a thē. Only one other example of the occurrence of the word اثنى is to be seen in this series, no. 145.

It is not till we remember that in the year 126 fell part of the reign of each of three Khalīfehhs (El-Welīd II., Yezīd III., and Ibrāhīm), that the full significance of these three arrangements of annulets in this year is seen. For a discussion of the whole question of the use of annulets I must refer the student to my forthcoming Essay on the Amawī coinage.

On the reverse the annulets are six, ○ ○ ○ ○ ○ ○, not between the words, but outside, as usual.

This is one of the remarkable class of coins (of which about eight are known) struck by Abū-Muslim, the energetic leader who set the representative of El-'Abbās on the throne of the Khilāfeh, and overthrew the power of the Amawīs in the East. It thus forms a link between the Amawī coinage and the regular 'Abbāsī currency. Though the coin above described does not present the name of Abū-Muslim, there can be no doubt as to its attribution, on account of the introduction of the new and very suggestive marginal inscription: 'Say, I will not ask of you any reward, but love to [my] kindred.'
