[The text discusses various morbid conditions, their causes, and their effects. It mentions terms like 'Morbus', 'Morbis', and 'Morbus', which likely refer to different types of diseases or ailments. The author appears to be providing a detailed analysis of these conditions, possibly based on a specific medical theory of the time.]
