Bright Phoebus smiling brings the Morning-tide
And fair the Orient his Purple shows,
Sire of our Joy! o Source of our Delight.
O Day, the fairest sure, that ever rose.

On Pleasure's Wing descend, and statly proud
Give to each Hour a Tincture of thy White,
Nay, when the Voice has ceas'd to swell aloud
With blessing Hymns; then close thy happy Flight.

But where am I? what do I undertake
A Stranger in Apollo's Sanctuary?
What means this Eagernes? and for whose sake
Stand I inclined to the Poesy?

Is it to sing the majesty of Day?
What will the silly Muse with all her strains?
True 'tis a Work of Milton's higher lay,
Of charming Addison's and Thomson's brains.

But yet transported by the keenest blaze
(That ever warm'd a Bosom) of Delight,
J scorn the Censure's all reproving gaze
And think me safe in thee, Soul-cheering Light!

ILLVSTRIOUS PAIR! O Glory of the Land!
The Temple calls YOU in; the Altar glows
With incense, which the Subject's pious Hand
In double fragrant Heaps on YOU bestows.

CHIRSTINA! now shake of the untim'd Delay
THY HENRY waits for Hymen's sacred Noose,
Go on, YE both, the Myrtles pave the Way,
Knot fast the Tie, that never shall grow loose.

SHE comes already here, majestic fair,
In white as Innocence with Silver clad,
A golden Garland decks HER black-brown Hair,
The Graces play around in female Red.

HER left attends the Honour of HER Youth
The Off-spring of Silesia's noblest Race,
Thrice welcome, LORD! pronounce with joyous Mouth
The Word, that shall Thy Life for ever grace.

Tis given -- Well! the Trumpet sounds aloud
Musick and Song ding sweet the pleas'd Ear,
From ev'ry where J hear the blessing Shout:
Sure, 'tis the fairest Day of all the Year.

A gentle Love may still YOUR Life adorn,
Succeeding Years on You their Plenty run,
Full blooming Peace may ever bless Your Morn,
And Age anteceded by Delight come on;

Yes when old Time shall turn the fated Hour
Which only can YOUR well-ty'd Knot unfold,
And YOU at last are yielding to his Pow'r
What rests of both, one Sepulchre shall hold.

Yet, while with close Delight and inward Pride
I see the Pomp; the Dusk begins to hush
Our World; bright Venus shows her twinkling Side
And but the western Parts with crimson blush.

Farwell o God of Day! set up thy Rest -
Put out the Horses of the beamy Wain,
And do recline thy self on Theis's Breast.
He flies. - - - The Night falls dark'ning on the Plain.
